Mission:

The mission of the U.S. Parole Commission (USPC) is to promote public safety and strive for justice and fairness in the exercise of its authority to release and supervise offenders under its jurisdiction. USPC has jurisdiction over federal offenders who committed offenses before November 1, 1987; all District of Columbia offenders; Uniform Code of Military Justice offenders who are in the custody of the Bureau of Prisons; Transfer Treaty cases (United States citizens convicted in foreign countries, who have elected to serve their sentence in this country); and State probationers and Parolees in the Federal Witness Protection Program. USPC renders decisions on National Appeals Board cases and decides action on supervision, parole, or return to custody cases under their jurisdiction.

Resources:

The FY 2014 budget request for USPC totals $13.0 million, which is a 1.5% increase over the FY 2012 Enacted level.

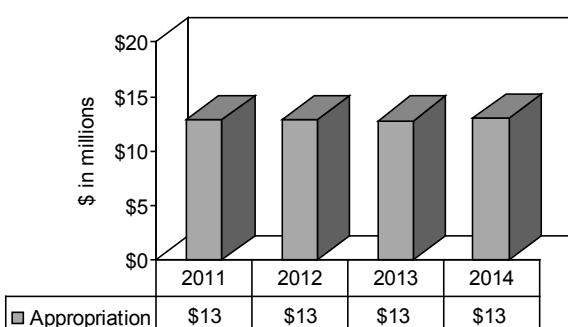

Organization:

USPC is managed by the Commission Chairman who, along with four other commissioners, is appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. All USPC offices and staff are located in the District of Columbia. The staff carries out the Commission's operations and support functions.

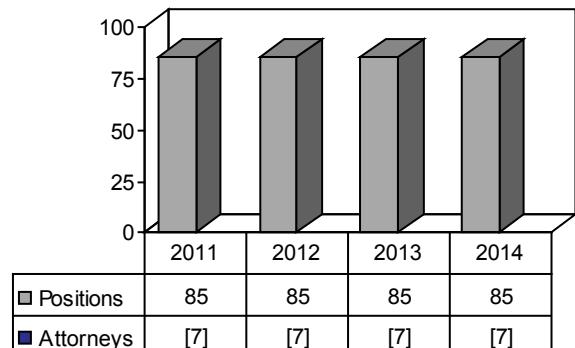

Personnel:

The USPC's direct positions for FY 2014 total 85 positions and is the same as FY 2012 Enacted.

FY 2014 Strategy:

In meeting its statutory requirements, USPC continues to face challenges that are complex and evolving. The major task before USPC is to take immediate action on violent offenders, while reducing recidivism rates for low-risk, non-violent offenders by implementing new revocation guidelines and establishing alternatives to incarceration. USPC policies and program strategies that are key to reducing recidivism rates include using:

- appearance notices to encourage an offender under supervision in the community to appear at a revocation hearing;
- reprimand sanctions hearings to confront an offender to address non-compliant behavior and to make a commitment to make positive behavioral changes, thus complying with the conditions of release;
- drug treatment centers to address an offender's drug abuse problem, thereby reducing the chance of returning to prison; and
- mental health hearing dockets to increase the treatment engagement of the mentally ill offenders to reduce their risk level in the community.

The FY 2014 strategy maintains the Commission's focus on returning low-risk non-violent offenders to parole or supervised release rather than prison when possible. However, USPC will continue to issue warrants for those that willfully violate the conditions of their release and for those with the most egregious behavior (typically tied to violence, child abuse, sex offenses, etc.). This approach keeps communities safe while returning productive, low-risk offenders back to the community in a timely and cost efficient manner.

USPC currently projects the total prisoner and parolee population, including District of Columbia (D.C.) supervised releases, will be approximately 20,600 in FY 2014. The federal population is projected to be 3,600 and includes 1,200 federal prisoners and other offenders such as witness security, foreign treaty and military justice offenders, and 2,400 parolees. The D.C. population under USPC's jurisdiction is projected to be about 17,000, and includes 8,000 prisoners and 9,000 parolees and supervised releases.

Much of the D.C. caseload is driven by offenders under supervision in the community that require USPC to evaluate their progress, keep track of those that are at risk, and impose additional sanctions or conditions to ensure public safety.

FY 2014 Program Changes:

There are no program changes for USPC.
